Islamic State confirms Baghdadi is dead, appoints successor
REUTERS
Cairo, October 31

THE ISLAMIC STATE militant group confirmed on Thursday its leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi has been killed, the group's news agency Amaq said in an audio tape following a US weekend raid.
Baghdadi, an Iraqi jihadist who rose from obscurity to declare himself "caliph" of all Muslims as the leader of Islamic State, was killed by US special forces in northwestern Syria, President Donald Trump said on Sunday.
The group had been silent until now. As successor it appointed someone Amaq only identified as Abu Ibrahim al-Hashemi al-Quraishi.
The group, which controlled swathes of Iraq and Syria between 2014 and 2017 and carried out atrocities that horrified most Muslims, also confirmed the death of its spokesman Abu al-Hassan al-Muhajir.

Scientists are working overtime to debunk the vaping scare

ROBERT LANGRETH
New York, October 31

PORTLAND STATE UNIVERSITY chemistry professor David Peyton had never been attacked with such intensity.
Peyton and a group of other chemists discovered almost five years ago that e-cigarettes could sometimes produce more cancer-causing formaldehyde than regular cigarettes. Formaldehyde is produced by a chemical reaction when a regular cigarette is lit, and finding it at such high levels in e-cigarette vapor, which has been held out as a safer smoking alternative, was a surprise. The study made headlines when the New England Journal of Medicine published it in January 2015.
But along with the publicity came a swift backlash.
The first wave emanated from critics online. The day the study was published, a pro-vaping activist posted an open letter to Peyton online, questioning it. Bloggers flamed it as "bogus" and "invalid." The inboxes of Peyton and his colleagues were inundated with name-calling emails.
Three months later, the activist, a British anti-tobacco advocate and consultant named Clive Bates, and a little-known Greek cardiologist named Konstantinos Farsalinos called the study "highly inaccurate and misleading" in a 14-page complaint to the journal's editors, seeking its retraction. About 40 researchers and vaping-advocates signed a petition backing the complaint; some of them, or their organisations, have received funding that originated from tobacco or vaping companies or vaping advocacy organisations.
The New England Journal of Medicine says it rarely receives third-party petitions for retractions. The journal published a critical letter from Farsalinos and two other researchers, but didn't retract the study.
Vaping proponents "really wanted to kill it," said Peyton. "We had published in this very prestigious journal and used the word cancer and put some numbers to it, and they didn't like that."
The stakes are rising quickly in the debate over the safety of vaping. Officials are trying to understand an epidemic of acute vaping-related lung injuries that has hurt 1,604 people and killed 34 as of mid-October, according to the US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. Most cases involved vaping THC, the active ingredient in marijuana. A surge in teen vaping has alarmed parents, strained schools and rattled regulators.
Even before all that, the clash over vaping's long-term effects had become a brawl.
Farsalinos, a 44-year-old doctor affiliated with the University of Patras and the Onassis Cardiac Surgery Center, has emerged as a general in the vaping war. A former smoker who switched to electronic cigarettes, he's made a mission of rebutting what he sees as flawed research, publishing more than 70 studies and letters on e-cigarettes and tobacco harm reduction.
"I am not aware of any other scientist in the world who has more publications than me concerning e-cigarettes," he said.
Farsalinos travels the global scientific-conference circuit talking up the public-health benefits of vaping.
